The group was founded in 1996 by two classmates Mike Shinoda and Brad Delson . Initially it was called SuperXero. Later they changed their name to Xero. It included Mike , Brad , Joe , Dave, Rob and Mark . Despite limited resources , they started recording some songs in Shinoda's bedroom , which became the first studio group. After the failure of many labels from the contract with the group, stress and dissatisfaction in it became more and more . Realizing that this group will have no future , Mark left the band in search of other projects. Dave Farrell also had to leave them , since his tour began another project . Xero spent considerable time searching for a replacement vocals Mark as guys do not know about a vocalist living in Arizona - Chester Bennington . Through his friend Jeff Blue , vice president of Zomba Music, Bennington musicians called and asked them to send her vocals on a demo tape. Bennington , breaking away from celebrating his birthday , recorded a demo tape and gave it to listen to the guys on the phone. His unique voice has made a huge impression on the group . Chester the next day flew to Los Angeles . Once Chester has agreed to join the group , it became known as Hybrid Theory
